RISK FACTORS

Risks related to the Bank's business activities and industry

The second paragraph of the risk factor entitled "The imposition of new U.S. tariffs on imports from Canada may have an impact on the Bank's financial position." on page 38 of the Prospectus is deemed deleted and replaced with the following:

"Canadian consumer confidence has rebounded in recent months from previously low levels. Earlier declines in sentiment among consumers and businesses were largely attributed to initial policy actions by the U.S. administration, which included trade threats directed at Canadian exporters. However, the policy landscape has since shifted, with the administration's tariff strategy refocusing on other global trading partners. The anticipated adverse effects on Canadian businesses have been moderated by exemptions for goods that comply with the United States-Mexico-Canada Agreement (USMCA). As a result, key indicators of consumer and business confidence have shown signs of recovery.

Globally, trade tensions have persisted. The implementation of a comprehensive tariff package by the U.S. administration has raised average import duties to 18.6%, the highest level recorded since 1933. This period of elevated economic uncertainty, coupled with the unpredictability of U.S. trade policy, continues to contribute to volatility in financial markets and exerts pressure on the broader economic and investment outlook. These developments have implications for inflation dynamics, foreign exchange rates, recessionary risks, and the stability of global supply chains.

The potential impact on the Bank and its clients is contingent upon the nature and duration of these evolving conditions. Key factors include the longevity and escalation of tariff measures, the emergence of retaliatory actions, potential fiscal and monetary policy responses, and the reactions of global financial markets.

The Bank continues to monitor these developments closely, assessing both direct and indirect implications for its financial position and that of its clients. This analysis is conducted within a macroeconomic context characterized by elevated debt servicing costs, subdued consumer demand, and increased operating expenses - partly driven by ongoing supply chain reconfigurations. The Bank will continue to incorporate trade and tariff-related considerations into its ongoing evaluation of top and emerging risks.”
