

Metro Vancouver: Tough year for the residential market in 2022 as interest rates bite

By Daren King

Based on December data from the Real Estate Board of Greater Vancouver (REBGV), cumulative sales in 2022 reached 28.9K, a decrease of 34.3% from the record year observed in 2021 and 13.4% below the 10-year average (chart 1). Rising interest rates have weighed heavily on the Vancouver real estate market since the spring and are still being felt today. Indeed, home sales in December 2022 were down 51.8% compared to the same period last year (chart 2). On a 12-month basis, sales in the detached, attached and apartment segments plunged by -53.3%, -48.4% and -52.0% respectively.

On a monthly basis, we estimate that the downward trend seen in recent months paused in December as seasonally adjusted home sales grew by 1.3% from November, the second increase in eleven months (chart 3). Nevertheless, sales continue to hover near the low level reached in 2019 and down 53.9% from their peak in January 2022. While we expect the Bank of Canada to keep its policy rate in restrictive territory for most of 2023, the outlook for a recovery in the housing market remains limited. As a result, sales are expected to remain below their historical average in the coming months.

On the supply side, we estimate that new listings dropped 22.7% from November to December. Despite this, the low level of sales allowed inventory to build up, with active listings increasing by 2.2% in the month. The increase in inventory, combined with the low level of sales pushed the market conditions further into “favourable of buyers” territory (chart 4). Expect lower home prices in the months ahead.
