How the Grinch Stole Incremental Yield

By Ethan Currie

As the holiday season approaches, we carry on (with glee!) through NBC's 2025 Economic Advent Calendar. Let's see what's behind Door #12... (See page 2 for full schedule of past and upcoming releases in this series).

Spread compression in 2025 was a testament to investor comfort with high-grade credit. Deals from global SSAs (including from Canadian provincial and PSE issuers) were met with strong demand, often pricing through guidance and performing well in secondary. Spreads to sovereign curves raced tighter, as incremental yield offered by these names was snatched up keenly. G-spreads saw notable compression, and while swap spreads performed well (but offer relatively loftier levels), we see scope for sustained performance. Traditional 'Tier 2' issues saw notable spread compression, as did Canadian PSEs—relative value dynamics here continue to flag encouraging.

Notwithstanding broader macroeconomic risks, we would not favour a particularly defensive asset allocated at this time, despite risk asset valuations getting called into question. Assuming marginal Fed rate relief gets delivered (we see scope for 50bps in 2026), and absent a significant credit / market straining event, risk-on tone (and the performance of credit-favourable SSA debt) should continue to flourish in the new year. More broadly, we remain constructive of the Canadian provincial sector, where fiscal and supply fundamentals remain technically supportive of performance vs sovereign curves.

As mentioned in NBCM's 2026 SSA Outlook, aggregate 2026 supply is expected to remain strong but broadly stable. The traditional January surge in supply remains a fixture as issuers seek to capitalize on early year liquidity.
