

Canada: Merchandise trade balance swung back into deficit territory in November

By Jocelyn Paquet

Canada's trade balance fell into negative territory for just the third time in the past 18 months in November, as exports retraced at a faster pace than imports. Shipments in the energy segment suffered from a drop in prices, with most categories contributing to the decline: coal (-24.3%), natural gas (-13.1%), refined petroleum products (-7.9%) and crude oil/bitumen (-1.8%). Perhaps more worrying was the 6.4% drop in exports of motor vehicles/parts, the third such occurrence in 4 months. Following this decline, international shipments in the auto sector stood 20.4% below their pre-pandemic level and this despite a marked improvement in supply conditions in the sector (see chart on the left). This suggests current setbacks could have more to do with a drop in demand than with lingering pandemic disruptions. On a more positive note, agricultural exports increased for the seventh time in 8 months, with shipments of wheat (C$1.36 billion) and canola (C$0.80 billion) reaching new all-time highs (see chart on the right). The conflict in Ukraine has certainly stimulated demand for these crops, but the massive increase in exports would not have been possible without the particularly good harvest experienced last summer. Turning to imports, the decline was led by the consumer goods segment. More specifically, inbound shipments of pharmaceutical products sank 11.5%, something Statistics Canada attributed to a "decline in imports of drugs, notably for the treatment of COVID-19." With one month of data still to come, trade in goods looks likely to contribute positively to GDP growth in the fourth quarter of the year, with real exports showing little movement and real imports tracking a small decline.

HIGHLIGHTS:

- The merchandise trade balance swung back into deficit territory, moving from +C$0.13 billion (initially estimated at +C$1.21 billion) in October to -C$0.04 billion in November. Analysts expected a +C$0.50 billion print.
- Nominal exports sank 2.3%, while nominal imports retraced 2.1%.
- On the exports side, 8 of the 11 industries covered saw decreases in the month, led by metal ores/non-metallic minerals (-13.3%), motor vehicles/parts (-6.4%), consumer goods (-6.3%), aircraft/transportation equipment (-5.6%) and energy products (-4.7%). These were only partially offset by a 6.7% increase in the farm/fishing/intermediate food products category.
- The drop in imports, meanwhile, reflected retreats in the following segments: aircraft/transportation equipment (-14.0%), forestry products/building materials (-6.1%) and consumer goods (-5.7%).
- Canada's energy surplus with the world narrowed from C$12.8 billion to a 10-month low of C$12.1 billion, while the non-energy deficit shrank from C$12.7 billion to C$12.1 billion.
- The trade surplus with the United States moved from C$8.6 billion to C$7.3 billion, its lowest level in nearly a year.
- In real terms, exports declined 1.4%, while imports fell 0.7%.
